"We are very excited to be partnering with Library Journal and BiblioBoard to showcase emerging self-published authors at the Library. We plan to use the SELF-e product to foster a community of local authorship and to provide our patrons with access to exciting new literary voices."

FAQs

What is SELF-e?

SELF-e is an innovative collaboration between Library Journal and BiblioBoard that enables authors and public libraries to work together and expose notable indie ebooks to readers looking to discover something new.

How does it work?

Content submitted on the SELF-e platform will be evaluated by Library Journal and, if selected, appear in a curated collection of self-published ebooks at participating libraries nationwide. Additionally, authors can opt to include their book in a statewide collection that promotes local authors.

How do local authors submit their work?

Once a library signs up for the platform, they will be provided a branded online submission form for their library, where they can direct interested local authors. The SELF-e Team will handle all follow-up and migration of material into the collections. There is no limit to how many submissions any library can take from local authors.

What is the patron access model for the SELF-e service?

Because ebooks submitted to SELF-e are distributed via BiblioBoard's PatronsFirst mobile library, there are no wait lists, turnaways or time limits on checkouts. With BiblioBoard, ebooks are book club-, classroom- and patron-friendly—ready for an unlimited number of users to read at any time.

How does pricing work?

The affordable basic platform fee includes the submission system, as well as access to your library's statewide indie collection. The Library Journal-curated collections will be available for subscription by genre, so libraries can choose interests specific to their library.
